Outdoor Vacuum

I had to cut the grass.
The mower's electric, so not as loud as gas.
Chaco still growled and glared.
When I finally stopped, Chaco finally shared,
"I dislike the outdoor vacuum."
"Duly noted," I replied, as Chaco sniffed an early bloom.
Having picked up the clippers, Chaco asked me,
"Are those outdoor scissors I see?"
"Sort of," I replied, and let a pruning sail.
"I don't mind scissors," Chaco stated, while wagging his tail.
Chaco proclaimed, "It's time for a walk."
I concurred, but first had to ask, "When did you learn to talk?"

What About Medicare?

Editor:

We read with interest about Assemblyman Wood's continuing efforts to find remedies for the ongoing abuses to our dysfunctional healthcare non-system (NCJ Daily, March 2). A.B. 1537 is the newest example as it tries to reign in the horrendous profiteering in privately run nursing homes in California.

However, as Tony Chicotel, attorney for the nonprofit advocacy group California Advocates for Nursing Home Reform (CANHR) observes, impact of the bill will be limited and without significance. Overwhelmingly, the explanation for this lies with skilled nursing facilities' (SNF) operators continuing to find ways to game the system. It's like putting fingers in the dike. As water seeks its own level, so does the never-satisfied thirst for profit continue to find ways to feed itself. In the realm of health care, this runs 180 degrees counter to public need.

Chicotel says, "government is a terrible consumer of long-term care" and, absent some kind of seismic reform, we are stuck with "the status quo." Not so: For 58 years, Medicare has been a public health safety net for elders and the disabled. Medicare is a revered and valued government program that spends some 98 percent of its funds for patient care.

When it is improved (adding vision, dental, hearing and long-term care, for example) and expanded to every resident in California, it would cure the SNF abuses simply by streamlining administrative costs and eliminating profiteering. There's your seismic reform, with efficiency that far exceeds that of any for-profit entity.

The California Nurses Association with Assemblyman Ash Kalra have introduced A.B. 1690 to develop a program designed to bring equitable, accessible, guaranteed, high-quality healthcare service to all Californians. Given Dr. Wood's ongoing search for healthcare justice and his avowed support for single-payer, universal healthcare in the past, we look forward to his enthusiastic support for this bill.

Newsom's Climate Budget Would Slash Funds that Protect Coast

Gov. Gavin Newsom's proposed budget would cut funding for coastal resilience projects almost in half, eliminating more than half a billion dollars of state funds this year that would help protect the coast against rising seas and climate change.

The cuts are part of Newsom's proposed $6 billion in reductions to California's climate change programs in response to a projected $22.5 billion statewide deficit.

California's coastal resilience programs provide funding for local governments to prepare coastal plans and pay for some projects that protect beaches, homes and infrastructure at risk from rising sea levels. Greenhouse gases are responsible for warming the planet, which melts ice and causes sea levels to rise, which is projected to have a disproportionate impact on Humboldt County.

Newsom's proposal would budget $734 million for coastal resilience, a cut of 43 percent or $561 million compared to 2021 and 2022, according to the Legislative Analyst's Office.

Some lawmakers told CalMatters that they are concerned about Newsom's proposal to gut the programs that help coastal towns prepare for climate change and flooding, which already has damaged some communities.

Sen. Josh Becker, who chairs the Senate's budget subcommittee, called the cuts "highly concerning," especially because they are excessive compared to the cuts applied to other state programs.

"Most programs received 10 percent cuts," Becker, a Democrat from San Mateo, said in an interview. "I'm very concerned about it, given the timing that we are experiencing these floods. My county is among the most endangered in the state for sea level rise."

Becker said he hopes to restore some of the money, possibly by finding federal funds to backfill some programs.

"These are dramatic cuts to something we agreed upon, and I'm going to try to get it back," he said.

Newsom's budget, released Jan. 10, is not final, with revisions due in May.

Experts say there's a lot at stake if sea level rise and coastal projects are not addressed now. Last month the state Department of Transportation, Caltrans, released a draft management plan estimating that it needs nearly $15 billion over the next ten years to protect bridges and roads from sea level rise.

A 2020 report by the Legislative Analyst's Office projects more than $20 billion worth of California property will be at risk or underwater by 2050 without planning and funding. "Waiting too long to initiate adaptation efforts likely will make responding effectively more difficult and costly.... The next decade represents a crucial time period for taking action to prepare for" sea level rise," the report says.

Much of the funding on the chopping block is in the form of grants to local governments to fund projects and planning. Among the proposed cuts is $64 million for cities to prepare extensive management plans to prepare for sea level rise.

Chris Helmer, director of environmental and natural resources for the city of Imperial Beach, said "if the state cuts adaptation projects, that would be a concern."

The city received about $200,000 to prepare a draft sea level rise plan, he said. It also has a grant pending with the Ocean Protection Council for another project to protect the city from encroaching seas.

"If there's no money, that's a major concern for us," Helmer said. This winter's storm exacerbated already massive flooding issues, he said. Waves broke on city streets, sand was driven well past the beach and rocks were thrown through residents' windows. The cleanup took two months.

Up the coast in Ventura, the storms also undermined beachfront infrastructure and proved the value of a project at Surfers' Point, partially funded by a $1.6 million state grant, that relocated a parking lot and bike path away from the water and protected the beach with a "living shoreline."

The second phase of that project is contingent on a $16.2 million grant application with the state. The timeline to begin is this winter.

Cody Stults, the city's associate engineer, said he is optimistic that the grant funding would survive the cuts, but added that there is no way the city could afford to pay for the next phase of the Surfers' Point project.

"If we can't get the money, I can almost guarantee that the work will not be going through this winter," he said.

Among the statewide programs with deep proposed cuts are protecting the coast from climate change, with a 65 percent cut; adapting infrastructure to sea level rise, a 74 percent cut; and implementing S.B. 1, a 63 percent cut.

S.B. 1 provides funding for much of the state's sea level rise response. The author, Senate President Pro Tem Toni Atkins, said the threat is more urgent now than when the 2021 law passed.

"The intent of S.B. 1 was to empower communities to work to find solutions at the local level to address sea level rise in partnership with the state," the San Diego Democrat said in a statement to CalMatters. "While we are facing challenging times, the past decade of responsible budgeting has prepared the state to withstand a downturn without devastating cuts to critical programs."

In recent testimony before the Legislature, Natural Resources Secretary Wade Crowfoot characterized the governor's proposed cuts as "surgical." When pressed to explain how the administration prioritized programs that would be trimmed, he said the focus was on addressing "clear and present danger." He identified wildfire and water projects as posing a direct and immediate threat to Californians.

Environmentalists said the governor's proposal to cut climate funding is shortsighted: Rising seas are often described as a "slow moving disaster," as the most devastating impacts are projected to show up in coming decades.

"Sea level rise is here," said Laura Walsh, California policy manager for Surfrider Foundation. While wildfires are a "huge deal and we don't want to compare sob stories, at this particular moment, living on the coast feels like an emergency. This is not belt-tightening, this is drowning," she said.

Newsom proposed the cuts right when California was lashed with a damaging series of atmospheric rivers, flooding and high surf, which was proof enough that sea level rise is harming the state now, said Donne Brownsey, chair of the California Coastal Commission.

Brownsey didn't criticize the governor's proposed cuts, but said she hoped they would be re-evaluated because coastal programs are critical to addressing an imminent crisis.

"What we saw in January was the trailer for the movie. That's the way it's going to roll," she said. "We're hopeful that given what happened — all the flooding and damage up and down the coastline — we are hoping there will be a reevaluation of these programs. It's not a future problem. It's today."

Brownsey and others noted that past budgets have been generous, but also that their programs are increasingly under pressure.

"We still have unprecedented amounts of funding to make these investments. The state is committed," said Jenn Eckerle, deputy secretary for oceans and coastal policy and executive director of the state's Ocean Protection Council. "But we also know impacts are happening now and we know they are only going to get more extreme over time. We also recognize that failure to invest in planning now can lead to significant costs later."

Crowfoot told the budget panel that state agencies have been scouring federal programs for money to backfill any state funding losses. About $4 billion in new federal money is set aside for coastal resilience projects.

The Newsom administration floated the idea of a general obligation bond to make up for the cuts, and a "trigger" provision that would restore funding if the revenue picture brightens.

But Rachel Ehlers of the Legislative Analyst's Office told the Senate subcommittee that expecting revenues to rebound is "optimistic." She said there is a strong chance that the deficit will grow. ●

Yurok Tribe Hires MMIP Investigator

Julia Oliveira, a Wyandotte Tribe citizen with 25 years of local law enforcement experience, most recently leading the Blue Lake Rancheria Tribal Police Department, is breaking new ground after being hired by the Yurok Tribe to become the first investigator in California fully dedicated to investigating Missing and Murdered Indigenous People cases.

"I applied for the MMIP investigator position because I am very passionate about this subject," Oliveira said. "Throughout the state of California, very few resources are allocated to cases involving missing and murdered Indigenous people. I was very excited when I saw the opportunity to be the person who is solely focused on finding missing Indigenous people."

Oliveira spent 20 years with the Humboldt County Sheriff's Office, holding a number of positions during her tenure, including conducting missing person and child abuse investigations. She continues to serve on the HCSO's Crisis Intervention Team and holds a leadership position within the United States Office of Violence Against Women's Task Force on Research on Violence Against American Indian and Alaska Native Women, according to a Yurok Tribe release.

"We are so fortunate that Julia decided to accept the investigator position. She has the ideal background for this important job," said Yurok Tribal Chair Joseph L. James. "She will help bring closure and justice to the families of missing tribal citizens. The new investigator will be engaged in our MMIP prevention effort too."

Oliveira's hire is yet another step in the Yurok Tribe's continuing efforts to address the MMIP crisis, which only gained real standing outside of Native communities in 2020, when the Sovereign Bodies Institute released a groundbreaking report that found Native women and girls were far more likely to go missing, especially in Northern California, or become victims of violence than the general population.

In December of 2021, the Yurok Tribe declared a state of emergency after a spate of attempted abductions and reports of missing persons, and the tribe hosted its first-ever Missing and Murdered Indigenous People Symposium in October, which brought tribal leaders from throughout California, as well as state, federal and local officials, together to discuss the crisis and prioritize reform efforts.

The release states Oliveira will work within the Yurok Office of the Tribal Prosecutor, which is part of the tribe's MMIP response team, and "will conduct inquiries into current and cold MMIP cases."

Prior to accepting the position, Oliveira served on the Office of the Tribal Prosecutor's MMIP Roundtable, which the release states meets regularly to "discuss solutions to the MMIP crisis."

The roundtable currently includes the Yurok Tribe, Hoopa Valley Tribe, Trinidad Rancheria, Bear River Band of the Rohnerville Rancheria and Quartz Valley Tribe.

Oliveira's position was funded by a $350,000 grant from the San Manuel Band of Mission, with the monies also going to "support the creation of a database that will be employed to analyze patterns in missing persons cases and identify potential perpetrators," as well as being used to purchase "billboard space to raise awareness about specific cases" and for supporting the "deployment of canine handlers, human remains detection dogs and ground-penetrating radar when necessary," the release states.

The Yurok Tribe was also integral in last year's passage of the Feather Alert bill, signed into law by Gov. Gavin Newsom in September, which — like an Amber Alert for children or Silver Alert for seniors — allows for the quick dissemination of information when an Indigenous individual is reported missing under unexplained or suspicious circumstances.

In February, the Yurok Tribe was selected to serve as the first pilot location of the U.S. Marshals Service's Missing and Murdered Indigenous Persons Initiative, which — according to a previous news release from the tribe — aims to "develop tribally-led collaborative partnerships to proactively examine public safety issues – particularly those involving missing endangered children."

"We hope to leverage our relationship with the U.S. Marshals to build out our investigative program," said Yurok Prosecutor Rosemary Deck.

An Industry on Edge

Reform initiative headed for ballot would dramatically overhaul cannabis regulation in Humboldt

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

The Cannabis Reform Initiative is slated to go before voters March 5, 2024, and if passed would overhaul the county's commercial cannabis cultivation regulations. Miguel Gutierrez Jr., CalMatters

The Humboldt County cannabis industry is on edge, with an initiative slated to come before voters next year that would dramatically reshape cultivation regulations, capping the number and limiting the size of farms, and overhauling how the county's primary cash crop can be grown moving forward.

More than four dozen cannabis farmers and industry advocates addressed the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors on March 7 to warn of what they see as the catastrophic consequences the initiative would have, pleading with the board to publicly oppose the measure, which has qualified to be on the March 5, 2024, ballot. Speaker after speaker decried the initiative, describing it as everything from "anti-cannabis" and "anti-community" to the work of "economic terrorists" and, perhaps most antagonistically, "the Karen Initiative."

"Do we want Humboldt to be just another part of rural America — bleak, devastated?" one speaker asked. "That's what you get with the Karen Initiative."

Initiated by a group of Kneeland area residents concerned about the environmental and neighborhood impacts of cannabis cultivation, the measure is shaping up to be one of the more contentious and divisive in recent memory. Signature gatherers for the initiative said they faced organized harassment while gathering the more than 7,000 signatures collected to qualify it for the ballot, while some who say they signed on to support the measure now say they were misled to think it was designed to protect the county's small farms.

After hearing speaker after speaker at the March 7 meeting decry the initiative, and receiving an alarming analysis from county staff that warned of "dire consequences" for both the industry and the planning department should it pass into law, the Board of Supervisors voted to form an ad hoc committee to meet with the initiative's proponents to see if a compromise can be reached to withdraw it. Fourth District Supervisor Natalie Arroyo, Second District Supervisor Michelle Bushnell and Planning Director John Ford are now slated to meet with the proponents in the coming weeks to start that conversation. But, in a letter to the board, one of the initiative's authors indicated such an accord is unlikely, as the group feels an obligation to the measure's 7,000 signees to move forward. It should also be noted that if passed, the initiative could only be amended or altered by another vote of the people.

The initiative's primary author, Mark Thurmond, declined to comment for this story when reached by the Journal, saying its proponents want to wait to speak with the ad hoc committee before responding publicly.

As the industry waits on proverbial pins and needles to hear the outcome of that meeting and contemplates next steps, we take a look at the current state of cannabis regulation in Humboldt and how it would change should the initiative be voted into law.

As it Stands

Once home to an estimated 15,000 cannabis farms, Humboldt County is now home to 1,027 active permitted farms, while the Humboldt County Sheriff's Office estimates another 1,000 are operating illicitly, primarily growing cannabis indoors to be sold illegally out of state. Of those with active permits, 739 are for pre-existing farms — meaning they were actively cultivated prior to obtaining permits — and 210 are new, with another 78 comprising a mix of the two.

The majority of these active permits are for farms cultivating less than 10,000 square feet of cannabis, with 189 ranging in size from a half-acre to an acre and 19 cultivating more than 1 acre of cannabis.

What constitutes a large-scale farm or a mega grow is in the eye of the beholder. While many have affixed the term to anything spanning an acre or more, the county staff report notes the largest farms in Humboldt County — ranging between 7 and 8 acres — are far shy of the 100-plus acre farms permitted in Santa Barbara and San Bernardino counties, or even the 60-plus acre farms closer to home in Lake County.

While there is certainly some disagreement about the adequacy of controls, applicants for cultivation permits have to show their farms' access roads are serviceable, that most neighborhood impacts will be mitigated and that the farms' water will be sourced in a way that won't negatively harm the environment — usually through rainwater catchment and storage systems and ground wells. In the case of ground wells, the county requires a geologic study to determine if they will impact nearby streams and rivers, or neighbors.

Permitted farms also continue to be monitored by the county for permit compliance, as well as state agencies, and the county staff report notes the Planning Department conducted more than 900 site inspections in 2022, as well as more than 400 "remote inspections," with some overlap between the two.

Combined with the changing market forces brought by full-scale legalization, the county's regulatory framework — which has evolved from an initial commercial medical cannabis land use ordinance passed in 2016 to one governing both medical and recreational commercial cultivation in 2018, which was further tweaked in 2020 — has unquestionably reduced the collective footprint of the industry in Humboldt. Regulation has also changed the nature and impacts of cannabis cultivation in Humboldt, weeding out most of the most egregious environmental damage and concentrating farms in certain areas, as the county's land use ordinances aimed, in part, to move cultivation out of the areas where it was deemed likely to cause the most environmental damage and onto land deemed better suited for farming.

The county staff report notes that areas with what's deemed prime agricultural land — communities like Honeydew, Shively and Holmes Flat in Southern Humboldt — have attracted concentrations of permitted farms, bringing neighborhood impacts that have frustrated some residents. A couple larger cannabis farms — particularly a 5.73-acre grow on a 7,000-acre property known as Rolling Meadows and a proposed 22-acre grow in the Arcata Bottoms that was reduced to 5.7 acres — have also drawn a lot of community concern and attention, the report notes.

Few seem fully happy with the current lay of the land. Farmers have repeatedly complained of the costs of permitting and compliance — especially amid an oversaturated cannabis wholesale market that has sent prices plummeting and what they deem high state and local tax rates — noting that geologic and hydrological studies cost money, as do water storage systems and road improvements. Environmental groups, meanwhile, seem to feel that regulation has curtailed many of the most egregious abuses, though oversight is laxer than they would like and they have ongoing concerns about the permitting of new farms in outlying, off-the-grid areas, generator use and the lack of comprehensive studies on groundwater draws and their cumulative impacts.

The Initiative

Distressed by an application to permit a more than 40,000-square-foot grow on Barry Ridge, a group of Kneeland residents convened a community meeting, worried about the impact the farm and others would have on everything from traffic and water resources to the elementary school. About 100 people attended, and several — including the initiative's chief proponents — walked away deeply concerned the county was permitting too many farms and exercising too little oversight.

They soon met with people from other areas of the county who had similar concerns and personally financed the effort to draft the reform initiative and then volunteered their time over the span of months to gather enough signatures to qualify it for the ballot.

If passed, the 38-page initiative would modify the county's General Plan — considering the guiding document for all county land use planning — to dramatically alter the cannabis cultivation permitting landscape in Humboldt. The fact that the initiative would amend the General Plan is noteworthy, as it would also then require the county to modify any codes or regulations deemed in conflict with the initiative so they align.

Perhaps most notably, the initiative would cap the size of cannabis farms at 10,000 square feet, which would immediately render more than 400 permitted farms "non-conforming." Additionally, the initiative would require farms be located on roads that meet or exceed Category 4 standards (two-lane roads that can accommodate speeds of 25 to 40 mph, according to the county website), that those using artificial light only use low-wattage lighting systems to reduce climate impacts and phase out of the use of generators to the point they will ultimately be allowed for emergency use only. It would also extend the forbearance period — the part of the year when farmers with water rights are prohibited from drawing surface water from streams and rivers — and require additional studies of groundwater impacts.

Members of the cannabis industry, complaining of over regulation, high compliance costs and heavy tax burdens, protest the county's Measure S tax in January of 2022. File photo

The initiative would also cap the total number of cannabis permits allowable in the county to 1.05 times the number issued as of March 4, 2022 (the day the initiative was certified to begin signature gathering), which would equate to 978 permits, according to the county staff report.

Under the initiative, cultivation permits would also expire annually, requiring farmers to reapply, while the planning department would be required to conduct on-site inspections annually for every permit and broadly increase public noticing efforts for every permit application. While the initiative specifies it would require public hearings for permits for all grows larger than 3,000 square feet, it is ambiguous whether this would apply for renewal applications, as the initiative doesn't describe a renewal process, but the prospect of holding 1,000 or so public hearings for permit renewals annually seems logistically untenable.

The initiative also includes a provision that states "no approval of a permit for commercial cannabis cultivation" would be allowed that results in "any one person holding more than one active permit." It's ambiguous whether that would simply limit the number of cultivation permits a single person can hold or should be interpreted to prevent a cultivation permit holder from also holding a tourism or processing permit, a point of significant concern for the industry. It's again important to note the initiative cannot be changed or amended from the form that was circulated for signatures and, if passed, could only be changed through another election.

If passed, between its cap on the size and number of farms and the number of permits an individual can hold, road requirements and limitations on the use of artificial light, the initiative would immediately render most of the county's farms "non-conforming," meaning that while they met the requirements at the time of permitting they are not in compliance with current regulations. The initiative would allow these farms to stay in operation as long as they don't "expand" their uses — which is defined to mean "an increase in cultivation area, water usage, energy usage, or the number or size of any structures used in connection with cultivation" — or apply for another permit.

There are unanswered questions about whether simply applying to renew one's permit, as required by the initiative, would constitute a new permit application that would require a non-conforming farm to come into compliance with the letter of the initiative. If that's the case, it would require swaths of the county's farm to reduce their footprints after a year. It's also unclear whether environmental improvements — like adding water storage capacity or a solar array — would fit the definition of an expanded use and thus force a non-conforming farm to come into compliance.

If the initiative passes, county planners would be put in the position of reconciling these ambiguities, with the potential that their determinations would then be challenged in court, whether by an unhappy cultivator or a disgruntled neighbor. From farmers to environmental groups to county staff, many have said they see implantation of the initiative, if passed, to be rife for legal challenges.

> Perhaps most notably, the initiative would cap the size of cannabis farms at 10,000 square feet, which would immediately render more than 400 permitted farms "non-conforming."

The initiative would also inherently leave some currently in the process of pursuing cultivation permits behind. It allows the county to continue processing all applications that were complete by March 4, 2022, but the processing of all permits received after would halt until the number of permitted farms falls below the cap set by the initiative. This would leave some applications pending indefinitely. Ford, the planning director, also noted this would mean some farmers who voluntarily participated in the county's "Retirement, Remediation and Relocation Program" — which allowed existing farms in environmentally unsuitable areas to retire their grows and remediate the land in exchange for a promise they would be allowed to relocate them to more suitable agricultural land — would be left out.

The initiative itself makes clear its primary concern is the environment, not the industry, farmers or the county.

"The purpose of this Humboldt Cannabis Reform Initiative is to protect the county's residents and natural environment from harm caused by large-scale cannabis cultivation," it states. "Specifically, the initiative seeks to promote environmentally responsible cultivation practices and support watershed health for residents, property owners and eco-

PREVENT HEALTHCARE FRAUD

Guard your Medicare card like your credit card

HICAP is the Health Insurance Counseling and Advocacy Program, a program of the Area One Agency on Aging. Registered HICAP volunteer counselors help senior and disabled Medicare beneficiaries understand their Medicare and health insurance benefits and choices.

HICAP volunteers advocate for Medicare beneficiaries regarding problems with Medicare or a Medicare provider. Volunteers counsel individual clients on a variety of Medicare and insurance issues and inform low-income Medicare beneficiaries about programs that can help pay for Medicare costs.

HICAP provides free training to become a registered HICAP Counselor with the California Department of Aging.

It takes just 24 hours of initial training and 10 hours of counseling observation time to become a certified HICAP Counselor. Volunteer counselors must provide a minimum of 40 hours per year of client counseling to maintain certification.

HICAP pays for volunteer mileage and ongoing training. Call HICAP to learn about this opportunity to assist older adults.

Enviros' View

While most of Humboldt County's environmental organizations have yet to take an official stance on the initiative, there seems to be consensus that the current regulatory framework needs to be improved and the initiative constitutes a significant overhaul of a complex industry.

"At least on the environmental side, there are things we've always wanted to have cleaned up," said Environmental Protection Information Center Executive Director Tom Wheeler, specifically pointing to a "loophole" that allows permitting of farms on prime agricultural soil even if it's in remote, off-the-grid areas, the pervasive use of generators and the need for a more thorough analysis of the cumulative hydrological impacts of wells.

Caroline Griffith, the executive director of the Northcoast Environmental Center, agreed current regulations need work, saying she does see a "kind of bias" toward "large, industrial" grows, which she would define as anything larger than an acre. Griffith also pointed to the continued permitting of farms in remote, off-the-grid areas, which require employee commutes and, often, generator use, adding to cumulative impacts.

"We share a lot of the same concerns" as the initiative's writers, Griffith said, though she noted the NEC has not taken a stance on the initiative despite months of internal discussion. "The reason we have not is because it is really such a complex issue that it's hard to address it with an initiative."

Griffith said she personally hopes the initiative might push the county to revamp its cannabis land use ordinance for a third time.

"The thing I would like to stress is there are a lot of people from all different sides who see issues with the state of our current ordinance and where it stands," she said.

Ultimately, the initiative's official proponents are the only ones who can pull it from the 2024 ballot, and it remains to be seen if they are willing to do so. If not, there's talk from the industry and officials of trying to put forward a competing ballot initiative, though what that might look like is anyone's guess at this point.

Wheeler, whose EPIC has officially come out opposing the initiative, said the petitioners are absolutely right in recognizing there are real environmental inadequacies in the county's existing framework and seeking to address them. But the issues involved are extraordinarily complex, he said, and a more collaborative process is required to adequately address them.

"I would like to see revisions to the county's ordinance, or new ordinances, come by the same way as the old ones, which was through that grueling, exhausting process where there are tradeoffs and we work together," he said. "I just think that's a better way of making laws." ●

Gettin' Saucy with Pot Wings

Infused honey-lime chipotle and Buffalo

By Jessica Ashley Silva
onthetable@northcoastjournal.com

It was the day after Super Bowl LVII. I awoke to hazy memories of Rihanna, funny commercials and something about a sports game before thoughts of leftovers took over. (Some of us are only here for the food, OK?) I peeked in my fridge and saw a whole bag of uncooked wings we hadn't gotten to at the party. I always outsource cooking the wings and these babies were left by some serious wing-loving friends. This had just turned into a case of finders keepers and I decided I was going to experiment. Dear friends, your poultry sacrifice was not in vain. I went so far down the hot-wing rabbit hole I ended up on the other side with a vision of cannabis-infused (ahem), pot wings.

I discovered the foundation of the perfect wing starts with the right cooking method. You can roast in an oven, you can deep fat fry, you can barbecue, sure, but for me, an air fryer is best. It creates the perfect contrast of juicy interior and crisp exterior with no oil necessary, making them maybe not healthy, but certainly a tad healthier than traditional frying, and in half the time as cooking in a traditional oven. Next is the sauce — finding a balance of flavors between the heat, the acid, and any sweetness is vital. Of all the iterations I've experimented with, my favorites turned out to be regular old Buffalo wings and honey-lime chipotle wings made from the Oh So Heavy Buffalo and Chipotle sauces from local brand Huck's Humboldt Hotties. And the last component: infused butter.

For those of us who love edibles, savory infusions are a nice reprieve from gummies day in and day out. When I don't have homemade canna-butter on hand, I head to a local dispensary for a jar of Heavenly Sweet, which does the trick just fine. I typically use about 30 milligrams of THC-infused canna-butter for a 2-pound batch of wings to be shared by two people. Add more or less, depending on your tolerance. When you're done digging in, do yourself a favor and grab some crusty bread to soak up any extra sauce. Or just lick the plate, I promise I won't tell your mother.

Infused Honey-Lime Chipotle Wings

If you prefer to use infused honey, you can skip the canna-butter and use regular butter.

Ingredients:

- 2 pounds chicken wings
- Salt and pepper, to taste
- ½ teaspoon granulated garlic
- ½ cup honey
- 2 tablespoons brown sugar
- Chipotle hot sauce, to taste
- 1 lime (zest and juice)
- 2 tablespoons butter (mix of regular and your preferred dose of infused canna-butter)

Heat an air fryer to 400 F and set the timer to 18 minutes. Pat the wings dry with a paper towel, then season generously with salt and pepper. Place wings in a single layer in the air fryer and cook for 18 minutes, turning halfway through. While the chicken cooks, prepare the sauce.

Measure your preferred dose of cannabis-infused butter. Add enough regular butter to reach 2 tablespoons total. (Use regular butter only if using infused honey.) Melt the honey, brown sugar and butter in a small saucepan over medium heat, whisking frequently. Add the lime zest and juice, garlic and chipotle hot sauce, whisking until fully incorporated. Let simmer until the sauce thickens, then remove from heat.

Remove the wings to a large bowl. Pour the sauce directly over the wings, then toss to evenly coat. Place the wings back into the air fryer for 2 to 3 minutes to caramelize the glaze. Serve immediately on a plate, then use a spatula to scrape the remaining sauce in the bowl over the wings — we don't want to waste all that infused goodness.

Infused Buffalo Wings

Ingredients:

2 pounds chicken wings
Salt and pepper, to taste
¾ cup Buffalo sauce
3 tablespoons butter (mix of regular and your preferred dose of infused canna-butter)

Heat an air fryer to 400 F and set the timer to 18 minutes. Pat the wings dry with a paper towel, then season generously with salt and pepper. Place wings in a single layer in the air fryer and cook for 18 minutes, turning halfway through. While the chicken cooks, prepare the sauce.

Measure your preferred dose of cannabis-infused butter. Add enough regular butter to reach 3 tablespoons total. Melt the butter in a small saucepan over medium heat. Once melted, add the Buffalo sauce and whisk until heated through and fully incorporated. Remove from heat.

Place the wings to a large bowl and pour the sauce directly over them, then toss to evenly coat. Serve with carrot and celery sticks and your favorite ranch or bleu cheese sauce. Pro-tip: Have some crusty bread on hand — it's perfect for sopping up any leftover bits of sauce to make all those milligrams count. ●

Staying in Touch

On, in and around the water

Some sports are like foreign languages — infinitely easier to learn when you're younger. Once humans reach a certain age, our hips, knees and balance operate as they always have, and it's much harder for our body to move in new, contrasting directions. For example, if you are a runner or a cyclist, your joints are used to moving bilaterally, forward and backward, but not side to side. Similarly, languages are easier to learn at a young age because the brain is still elastic and neural pathways are still forming. The body is not yet so set in its ways.

At 36, my sense of balance is what it is and doesn't seem to be improving much, despite my best efforts. Learning how to surf over the past year has felt rickety at best and impossible at worst. Young surfers glide by me, making it look easy in choppy, unpredictable conditions. Meanwhile, I am paddling for waves that often leave me behind, while the aforementioned young surfers stand on their boards in the most relaxed postures, like they are waiting for the bus.

It might be too late for me to become fluent in surfing, French or Spanish, but I keep trying to learn at least some words and movements, forcing my brain to take paths or make connections where it doesn't want to. My joints sometimes feel like they missed a turn and can't quite work in the ways that I wish they would, but I still go out to surf. This morning, when I was staring at the nearly full waning moon to the West, I wasn't thinking about my bad right hip, or my healing rotator cuff. I was just happy to be out there, content to be in touch with my surroundings, watching pelicans gliding a foot above the water and the sandpipers picking at the sand in the shorebreak. I was keenly aware it was just past low tide. Being aware of the tides is new to me, and one of my favorite parts of this new hobby (surfing is certainly a sport, but I still hesitate to call what I do out there a sport). More than anything, this in-tuneness is what gets me out. Gets me out of the house, gets me into the water and makes me feel alive, no matter the season.

Watching the sunrise from the water, a unique vantage point, has become one of my greatest joys in life. The distant golden orb advances from the East and illuminates the clouds in its soft, foamy light, reaching the westernmost water and rocks first. Watching the glow spread from Camel Rock to shore is pure delight. But you don't have to pick up surfing to see this; in fact, at the behest of territorial surfers and due to limited space in the water, I'm not encouraging (or discouraging) you to do so.

There are other avenues to get on the water for sunrise, sunset or midday. It doesn't matter how or where. Borrow a stand up paddleboard from a friend, or rent a kayak from Cal Poly Humboldt's Center Activities (visit centeractivities.humboldt.edu; you don't have to be a student), or get a good wetsuit and take a dip in one of our huge, brackish lagoons. Pay attention to the tides and the water levels, and pretty soon you too will have familiar landmarks in odd places throughout Humboldt County. Lagoon swimmers are familiar with, "the Snag" at Big Lagoon, a sun-bleached tree skeleton that for years has been laying on its side with its root wad facing East (0.9 miles from the boat ramp, if you were wondering). There are muddy spots further out in Big Lagoon and a sometimes-submerged snag laying on its side in Stone Lagoon. There's the anchored tree in the Mad River, placed there for salmon habitat. Countless trees, rock formations, sand bars and other landmarks serve as friendly orientation guides and markers of change in that place.

Knowing the coast, the tides, the shells and other creatures we share the world with gives a deeper meaning to our own existence. It feels like sitting down to pen a letter to an old friend — something intangible is exchanged, with knowledge or information passed from one being to another. With a letter, pen meets paper and words conglomerate to convey feelings, ideas and past events. When we write letters or even emails, we are making an effort to stay in touch with a person or persons. When we know the tides, natural landmarks and migration patterns of our neighbors, we are making an effort to stay in touch with the dynamic, ever-changing landscape of other lives around us.

If you're averse to being in the water, or to mornings, no need to fear. There are plenty of other opportunities to stay in touch. We already passed the King Tides (Jan. 21 and 22) but there are low enough tides in other months for decent tide pool viewing, if the weather isn't howling. Or snowing. Trinidad State Beach is a great place to look at tide pools, but so are College Cove, Moonstone Beach and Baker Beach. With any luck, you'll be able to say, "Hi," to the anemones and starfish.

This morning, as I watched a friend paddling toward me, I didn't think about how bad I am at actually catching waves. I thought about the tides and the pelicans and how just knowing this moment — just being there — felt right. I splashed the water with my hand and felt like I was in touch with the ocean, if only a tiny part of it. ●

Community Spotlight

Bayside Corners revitalization project

Bouncing back after the pandemic, nonprofit Bayside Corners, has an ambitious community revitalization project --- the repair and restoration of Bayside's 131 year old Temperance Hall and beautification of the surrounding property. Built in 1882, this centerpiece of Bayside's historic district at the intersection of Old Arcata and Jacoby Creek Roads, has provided the space for public meetings, socializing, cultural events, classes and youth groups. For many years, the Hall's main use has been Mistwood Educational Center.

With Mistwood's cooperation, Bayside Corners aims to beautify the site and upgrade the Hall kitchen, bathrooms, stage and meeting hall, to make it attractive for community uses after-school hours, weekends, and summer months.

Maggie Gainer, Bayside Corners' president, said, "We took ownership of the building because providing a social gathering place perfectly matches our community-building mission. Social isolation is caused by community design, social norms, public policy, neglect, and systems that make it hard to build connections. Communities are safer and healthier when residents know their neighbors to reach out to in times of need."

This ambitious Master Plan needs community support to accomplish the project in stages. Phase I will address the stormwater drainage problems onsite, raise the building and strengthen the foundation. A USDA grant program for rural facilities can match local funds raised up to $52,000.

The first benefit for this project is a St. Patrick's Day event on Friday, March 17th. An Evening of Irish Music & Humor in Bayside will feature The Fiddle Academy All-Stars and Seabury Gould. Doors open at 7:30 and live Irish music starts at 8:00 PM. Drinks and desserts will be available and the best of a limericks contest will be read aloud and win a free beer. Winning limericks will name local leaders, favorite landmarks and hangouts. See limerick instructions at the website www.baysidecorners.org where $20 tickets are also sold, or by contacting 707-826-2021, baysidecorners@gmail.com, or at Mistwood in the Temperance Hall Monday – Thursday 4-5:00 PM. Make this your St. Patrick's Friday date night in Bayside.

Sport and Commercial Ocean Salmon Season Closed Statewide

By Kenny Priest
fishing@northcoastjournal.com

Due to low abundance, the sport and commercial Chinook salmon season has been shut down statewide in 2023. The decision was made last Friday by the Pacific Fishery Management Council. Anglers will have to wait until at least 2024 to catch a salmon like the one pictured with Riley Skillman from Mesa, Arizona, a few years ago out of Shelter Cove.

The Pacific Fishery Management Council on March 10 provided three options for recreation and commercial salmon fishing from the California/Oregon border all the way south to the California/Mexico border. Unfortunately, but not surprising, all three options included the words "closed." In an unprecedented decision, the PFMC was left with little choice but to close recreational and commercial salmon fishing this season statewide. Southern Oregon, which also impacts Sacramento and Klamath River fall Chinook, will also be closed from Cape Falcon south.

The sport fishery had been scheduled to open off California in most areas on April 1. The closures were made to protect Sacramento River fall Chinook, which returned to the Central Valley in 2022 at near-record low numbers, and Klamath River fall Chinook, which had the second lowest abundance forecast since the current assessment method began in 1997.

Yet to be determined are the fishing seasons within the Sacramento and Klamath Rivers. It's widely believed neither will be open to the retention of fall Chinook, but two of the alternatives included both Klamath recreational and tribal allocations. Alternative one and two called for 1,804 recreational quota and 1,872 tribal allocation. Alternative three, which agency representatives and industry advisors view as the most likely, have zero recreational fall Chinook and just 68 for tribal. To view all salmon management alternatives, visit pcouncil.org/annual-salmon-management-process/.

Up next, the PFMC will hold a public hearing March 21 in Santa Rosa to receive public comment on the three proposed regulatory alternatives. The PFMC will then meet April 1 through April 7 in Foster City to procedurally finalize the closures. Details on how to attend the public hearing and PFMC meeting, as well as instructions to provide public comment, can be found at pcouncil.org.

Weekend weather

According to Ryan Aylward of Eureka's National Weather Service office, we'll begin to dry out following Tuesday's rain. "Wednesday and Thursday are looking dry," said Aylward. "We may see a few showers on Friday and through the weekend, but not enough to raise the river levels. Monday, we're looking at more widespread rain in the area, and we could see the rivers go back on the rise. And more rain is expected through the week."

The rivers:

Mad

The Mad nearly reached flood stage Tuesday but is now dropping slowly. With only a couple weeks left in the steelhead season, it's unlikely it will be anything close to green, especially with Ruth Lake dumping over the spillway.

Main stem Eel

The main Eel is forecast to reach 179,000 cubic feet per second Wednesday. Needless to say, it will be blown out for weeks. The main stem Eel, from its mouth to the South Fork is open to fishing all year. From April 1 through Sept. 30, only artificial lures with barbless hooks may be used.

South Fork Eel

The South Fork is also big and brown, running at 32,900 cfs and rising as of Tuesday. It's going need to stop raining soon or it may not be fishable prior to closing at the end of the month.

Van Duzen

The Van Duzen topped monitor stage Tuesday, peaking at over 13 feet at Bridgeville. It will be on the drop from Wednesday through the weekend, but more rain is in the forecast next week. Like the SF Eel, it may not have time to turn green before the season ends.

Smith

The fast-clearing Smith reached monitor stage, 25 feet at the Jed Smith gauge, Monday night. As crazy as it sounds, it could be in fishable shape by Thursday. Conditions for Friday and Saturday are looking even better, when it will be under 11-feet. There were some fresh steelhead caught late last week and there should be some downers starting to make their way to the ocean.

Who's Your Venus?

Venus in Fur at NCRT

By Tiggerbouncer Custodio
frontrow@northcoastjournal.com

Kathryn Cesarz and Jesse March in Venus in Furs.
Courtesy of North Coast Repertory Theatre

It would be foolish to not see the limited run of Venus in Fur at North Coast Repertory Theatre. Also, what a shame that this is not a full run of David Ives' 90-minute comedic play of intricacies, intrigue and intimacy. Jesse March and Kathryn Cesarz will undoubtedly find even more nuance layered between the spaces of Ives' gorgeous writing and deserve the time to explore the subtleties that birth their fresh and bold work. Obvious products of Dell'Arte's approach to character exploration through the physical, this work is a strong evolution. They tone back the technique that's often too apparent in other Dell'Artians' work, and make way for the truth of their characters through relationship and chemistry. This creates the space for the audience to be swept away with what is not being said as much as the actual dialogue. Yet it still feels authentic and in-the-moment, where the same approach by other actors could feel overly produced.

The stage design is underwhelming, messy even. And absolutely brilliant. I have, in the past, felt that the staff of various otherwise incredible productions put minimal time into supporting the actors' work at this theater. However, this production and Managing Artistic Director Calder Johnson use that note almost as a joke. Was there not enough fabric to actually close the curtains to hide the backstage/onstage clutter? In fact, the clutter is necessary to give March's character Thomas support as the playwright trying to cast his show. It's also simultaneously the peek-a-boo Cesarz's character Vanda uses for her playground as the whirlwind actress seeks to land the role. In addition to the "mature themed" warnings and advertisements with scanty costumes painting a picture of a seedy show, there's the stripper pole in the middle of the stage. Quickly all this pretense and assumption fades into the metaphors of the boxes, unlit backstage, yet in plain sight. I love all of it. Brian Butler and Johnson's lighting design (executed perfectly by Butler on the night I attended) is simple, effective and divine. Megan Hughes' costume design is good, though there are many lines that specifically reference the textiles or circumstances of costumes that require suspension of disbelief. That's not leather, that's not a fur, those heels are absolutely not stuck in a New York City sidewalk grate — is that really a period coat and dress? These were my thoughts as the play's dialogue differed from what I saw. And still, somehow, it works. Perhaps it's in the magic of the show or the magic of Hughes. Further, all hail the mirror heel, thigh-high stiletto platform boot that is centered in a stunning, elongated moment that had me biting my lip and on the edge of my seat. (Please, Goddess Aphrodite, let them be my size!)

I wish March and Cesarz paid the same attention to their dramatic realism as to their comedy in their phenomenal acting. This is particularly true toward the end of the production, where power dynamics turn physical and their Dell'Artian-isms come out. In comparison to their abilities elsewhere, the end didn't seem dire enough, and I wish they would have leaned into the consequence and survival of the moment. Perhaps this could have been aided by a clever sound design producing more chaos the actors would be forced to push through. Perhaps I am just inspired to get in on a fantastic production, as lovers of the craft sometimes are, by offering suggestions.

The show, this production and its staff and actors question where the boundaries of reality and theater go askew. It asks us to look at chemistry and its meaning. It plays with power and power dynamics, comparing itself to BDSM. It gives social commentary that is not preachy, leaving room for interpretation and opinion. It plays with magic. It is the kind of production you should see because it will inspire you to see it again and experience the newness of the moments created by nuances highly skilled actors use to create an entirely fresh take, specific and special to that exact moment. You only have this weekend left to witness it.●

Wishful Weed Strains for 2023

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill
jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

Shutterstock

Weed Who Must Not Be Named. Who knew we'd need a Patronus against J.K. Rowling? Here to aid you in the defense against dark transphobes is a Potions Master's concoction of three magical strains: TERF War, Neville Bongbottom and Strawberry Snape. Soon hateful takes, like those of a children's author turned fascist cheerleader, will fizz into the background. If you need to dull the anxiety of your state trying to legislate you out of existence, try it with a dab rig or cook it over a spoon and inject it into your neck.

Hotbox the House. Hoo-boy, has it been frustrating watching Republican officials abandon the health and safety of their constituents to push wildly unpopular forced birth legislation. There's probably a nice indica that will help you find some calm. But might it be more useful to pump a political ambition-dulling, empathy-boosting cloud of smoke into chambers for a couple rounds of debate and voting? Just an idea.

Scramble On. Blueberry Muffin is cool but now that eggs are basically chicken caviar and cannabis prices are in freefall, wake-and-bake aficionados can light up a strain with terpenes that taste like precious, cage-free contraband. Coop DeVille and Shell Crack deliver the simple country flavor you can no longer afford.

Bargewreck. The housing market is tough, especially for new and returning Cal Poly Humboldt students. Is it a massive logistical nightmare or a matter of perspective? A hit of this twist on Humboldt Hostel and Couch Surfer will allow you to hallucinate that your temporary accommodations — your busted car, a weird motel, an anchored barge — is the luxurious concrete-walled dorm room of your dreams.

Chat OG. Well, looks like we've learned nothing from the canon of science fiction and artificial intelligence is exceeding our ability to control it. Learn to be cool with the singularity by gradually upping your dose of this AI-engineered strain combining the genetics of, well, we don't know but the robots seem to think we should ingest it. Anyway, here's a cool airbrush-y image our new overlords made of you but, like, as a fairy elf with glowing skin.

Cancel Kulture Kush. Criticism or, worse, the consequences of your own terrible actions, can be stressful. Put down your phone and try this combination of Mel Gibskunk and the high-CBD strain Non-apology Tour that does what every good PR team strives to do: shut you up for a couple of weeks until this all blows over.

Keto Survivor. This one is all about the flavor, specifically the freshly baked bread you've denied yourself in relentless pursuit of visible abs. The aroma of Flour Power and Sour Doh will take you back to the bakery as soon as you open the baggie. Does it even get you high? Who cares? This stuff really smells like bread.

Parent-Teacher Confrinz. Another phone call from school about your kid? What you need to get through another scolding while seated at a tiny desk is a numbing combo of Breakfast Klub and Pineapple Permanent Record. Then you can talk to your kid calmly tomorrow. Be sure to arrange a ride home, though, because you are going to be extremely stoned for a long time.

Sour Apple for the Teacher. Parents only have to make it through as many school conferences as they have children. But teachers need a little something extra to get through back-to-back, face-to-face meetings with the same parents who've been staring, screaming and crying at them through Zoom for two years. When the last collage has been collected, go home, lock the door and let this fruity one-two punch of Razberry Retirement and Diesel Detention knock you the hell out.

Crypto Crasher. Listen, it took a lot of weed to wrap your head around crypto. It's going to take a lot of weed to purge it from your brain. Ultra-potent Tech Bro and OG NFT pair up to clear some data from your blockchain thing or whatever and make room for the next Ponzi scheme your cousin pitches you at a wedding.

Mummybear. This fruity combination of Tricky Treatz and Stranger Danger is bred for use in gummies to help you stop worrying that randos are going to give your kids edibles at Halloween or whenever. Store them in a secure location.

In Bloom

By Collin Yeo
music@northcoastjournal.com

I remember describing irony in a high school English class as something that fundamentally deals with opposites. I was looking down when I said it, having at the time not yet developed any of the obnoxious confidence that I am now unfortunately surging with. One girl in the class took my downward gaze as evidence of me reading out of the book for my definition, which wasn't possible, as none of our textbooks actually offered such a straightforward definition of irony. That might be part of the problem.

There's no shortage of irony in contemporary life. Take the assholes at Silicon Valley Bank, the "venture capitalists" who, having taken advantage of massive deregulation, are now clamoring for a bailout after their institution got gutted by a spooked run when interest rates hiked enough to prove that not everyone with an MBA is actually a genius. Quite the opposite, really.

Or take the dark suspicion that I, a nominal pacifist, has regarding the work required toward actually making a peaceful society. I'll give you a hint, it involves something different than bailouts for the wealthy, something more along the lines of screaming, burnt offerings of our elite class to a fertile harvest god. I am, of course, being ironic here, right?

I'm not a fan of orgies, bloodthirsty or otherwise. I'm probably just thinking about the coming spring, of renewal, of the opportunity for a thriving and vibrant world of pungent life. Of wet fecundity bubbling out of the rot of yesteryear, of sprouts growing out of the black desolation of the fire. We need those blooms, dearly. But more to the point, we need the rot and the fire first to make the grounds ready for the age of blossom. Think about that the next time you hear a politician calling for another war, or an expert economist calling for another capital bailout. Some experiments shouldn't be repeated, and some ideas (and their makers) should be retired. The soil awaits fertile nurturing.

Thursday

Philadelphia is famous for creating a lot of funk and R 'n' B musicians, particularly in the genre of "blue-eyed soul," epitomized by native sons Hall and Oates. One band carrying on that laidback tradition of pop and rock merged with a basic backbeat and funky syncopation is G. Love and Special Sauce, a veteran act from the 1990s trench days of the alternative jam scene. Tonight at 7 p.m. these playas can be found at the Arcata Theatre Lounge, with special guest Nat Myers opening the night ($26).

Friday, St. Patrick's Day

As I have mentioned here before, I am not a fan of this holiday, mostly celebrated in this country by mixing two of our less savory national pastimes: binge drinking and lying (in this case, about being Irish). Blame it on my former life as a bartender, I have a reflexive revulsion for this green day. But let the good times roll on, Here are three worthy gigs for your consideration. Casa Nada productions is putting on a Goth Night at Synapsis at 7 p.m., featuring Dry Wedding, Dastbunny, Zero One and DJ Datura. A $10 bill gets you in the door. At the same hour, up north at the Trinidad Town Hall, you can enjoy some jazz with RLA Trio featuring guest appearances by trumpet master Nicholas D. Talvola and guitarist Doug Marcum. The entrance fee here is a sliding scale set between $10 and $20.

Finally, at 9 p.m. at Humbrews, Absynth Quartet will be doing its very fine thing for whoever chooses to darken the door and spit out $10 to the warden.

Saturday

The Miniplex is hosting a night of cool, synthy hipness from Los Angeles, as Madeline Goldstein headlines a gig with More Ephemerol. But wait, there's more. Former Humboldt County musical institution Patrick Tabor, aka Tabor Mountain, will also be on the bill, bringing his high-energy party rock glory back to town for the joy of the assembled masses. DJs Rosé and Mae will also preside. Things should start swinging by 9 p.m. and $10 will secure a spot for you.

Sunday

Well, the cosmos has decreed that it's a Grateful Dead day in these parts. There's an all-ages matinee show at Humbrews featuring the Magnificent Sanctuary Band, which will be playing songs from the Jerry songbooks beginning at 3 p.m. for a mere $10.

Later that evening at 8 p.m. at the Arcata Theatre Lounge, you will find The Garcia Project, a band dedicated to recreating the sounds of the Jerry Garcia Band, which I guess sounds different than and distinct from the Grateful Dead somehow ($25, $20 advance, $15 early bird).

Tabor Mountain plays the Miniplex on Saturday, March 18, at 9 p.m.

Monday, Spring Equinox

Well, spring is sprung and, to quote P.G. Wodehouse's Bertie Wooster quoting the only poem he remembered by Robert Browning, "God is in his heaven, and all's right with the world." Which means that Savage Henry must be putting on yet another installment of Metal Mondays. This week's gig features F. Emasculata from the United Kingdom, as well as two local groups, Gooseneck and The DTs. Ten bucks seems to be a popular price these days regarding entrance fees, so there you have it.

Tuesday

The Humboldt Bay Social Club has been doing its level best to stick out as a cool spot and, as far as I can tell, is succeeding. There are the regular free Thursday gigs played by guitar-slinging American Primitivist and all-around world traveler Oryan Peterson-Jones (did I forget to mention his gig Thursday, March 16? Shame on me; rewind and go if you are reading this in time). And on top of other live events, the venue is now hosting a regular movie night. Tonight's offering is the SNL-related '90s outing The Coneheads, about which I am curious as to whether it is still decently funny or excruciatingly dated. One could show up at 6 p.m., grab a refreshment and find out.

Wednesday

When people couple up, magic can happen, whether that magic is creative musical excellence (Linda and Richard Thompson's albums come to mind), scientific advances (see: Pierre and Marie Curie) or wild violence (like the exploits of the protagonists of Terrence Malick's Badlands, whose behavior was based on the actions of infamous characters I have no desire to name). In the case of Mark and Maggie O'Conner, I think musical excellence is the outcome here. These fiddling folksters have been ripping it up for the better part of a decade, and it shows in their flawless, collaborative frisson. Come on down to Humboldt's finest cemetery-adjacent venue, the Old Steeple to hear for yourself at 7:30 p.m. ($55). ●

Calendar March 16 – 23, 2023

The Humboldt Highlanders Pipe Band. Submitted

There are numerous St. Patrick's Day celebrations happening across the county (check this week's calendar and Setlist), but we're highlighting this one because it's full-kilt Irish fun. Celebrate St. Patrick's Day at the Logger Bar on Friday, March 17, from 5 p.m. to close (free) — and wish Michael Fields congrats on the one-year anniversary of owning the joint. This high-spirited event features Irish food (corned beef and cabbage, potatoes and Irish soda bread for donation) from 5 to 7:30 p.m., Irish songs with David Powell and Bud Ownings starting at 5 p.m., dancing by the Irish Dance Academy at 6 p.m., live music from the Humboldt Highlanders Pipe Band at 7 p.m. and music from the California Poppies at 9 p.m.

Spring is coming. We promise! Help usher it in with family friendly fun at the Spring Equinox Celebration, happening Saturday, March 18, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Humboldt Coastal Nature Center (free). Join Friends of the Dunes for spring-themed activities in nature, including a Dune Scavenger Hunt, Wildflower Walk and a Spring Storytime. This Spanish bilingual event is geared toward families with young children (ages 3-10), but all are welcome. Spring-themed snacks provided. RSVP is recommended, so call (707) 444-1397.

Seabury Gould. Submitted

OK, here's one more: An Evening of Irish Music and Humor, a benefit to support the repairs, site improvements and beautification of the 130-year-old Temperance Hall at the corner of Old Arcata and Jacoby Creek roads, is happening Friday, March 17, from 7:30 to 10 p.m. ($20, $18 online advance). This shindig should be a lively affair with people reciting Limericks about local faces and places, live Irish music by the Fiddle Academy All-Stars and Seabury Gould, and delightful desserts and drinks. Get tickets at the door or online in advance by March 15 at baysidecorners.org.

Scream VI and 65

By John J. Bennett
screens@northcoastjournal.com

Explaining to your kid that this is how you used to walk to school every day in Humboldt. 65

SCREAM VI. The world's infatuation with Scream (1996) kicked off just as I was entering a protracted contrarian period in my own cinema education. I hadn't yet come to appreciate the craft and silliness of horror and teen movies were too easily enjoyable to possibly be of merit; I was insufferable.

Because I live in the world, just as I did then, the franchise quickly became all but inescapable, one of the most ubiquitous, referenced, oft-parodied forces in contemporary culture. And so, yes, I've seen them — with the notable exception of Scream (2022), which would seem to have become the most essential of them all.

With his original script, Kevin Williamson pulled off the neat trick of recasting horror-nerdom (heretofore among the gamiest and most sacrosanct of realms) as something funny and ironic. Within a cinematic era defined by sarcasm and ostensible self-awareness, he created a template for the re-mainstreaming of horror and a third act for director Wes Craven (The Hills Have Eyes, 1977; A Nightmare on Elm Street, 1984). With admitted deftness, Williamson and Craven combined the outright nastiness of '70s horror (which Craven had a heavy hand in creating) with the silliness of some of the more exploratory genre exercises of the '80s. Then they channeled it through the sweaty conversations of VHS obsessives, doubled the jump scares and knife kills, and made something new (as well as a vast fortune).

While Scream seemed a little too cute (and probably too scary) for me at the time, the die-off of risk and invention at the upper tiers of American movie industry allows me to look at many of the movies of my youth with a new (old) eye, or at least through the heavily distorted lens of nostalgia. Which effect is compounded, in this case, by the presence of directors of a certain age — Matt Bettinelli-Olpin and Tyler Gillett (Ready Or Not, 2019) — who seem similarly afflicted.

I last checked in with the franchise for Scre4m (2011 — wait, when?), Craven's final movie. I remember it as being competently made, if extraneous, despite the presence of much of the original cast.

In the interim (I gather), the specter of Ghostface continues to loom: The daughter of original killer Billy Loomis (Skeet Ulrich), Samantha Carpenter (Melissa Barerra), her sister Tara (Jenna Ortega) and their friends having become the focus of the latest copycat's sadistic impulses.

Having survived that bloodbath, they've regrouped in New York City, where Tara et al. attend college and Sam contends with a social media onslaught accusing her of masterminding the recent killings. And then, more killings.

Much of the success of Scream VI (and presumably its predecessor) lies in the directors' (and writers James Vanderbilt and Guy Busick) fealty to the source material which, if one is not among the true faithful, is as much a weakness as a strength. What starts as clever homage and expansion on the theme (a film student dons the mask and kills the film studies professor who gave him a bad grade on a Giallo paper) eventually and inevitably feels a little long in the tooth (several sequences take place in the killers' movie-theater shrine to the antecedent murderers and the books and movies they inspired).

Still, this outing has a better sense of humor than the fourth installment and, much to its credit, finds some revolting new ways to dispatch victims with knives. Though not yet a convert to True Fan status, I've begun to better understand the appeal. As much as Scream VI may serve the faithful, there is enough to it for even the less-ardent to enjoy. R. 122M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK, MINOR.

65. While probably unavoidable, the reveal in the trailer for 65 so spoils the surprise of the movie that it cannot but taint the experience of watching it. This may be unfair of me to say — I actually like the movie and can understand the need to use whatever marketing tricks are available to sell tickets. But it makes me nostalgic (there's that word again) for a lower-stakes era in movies, when a gamble could be taken in not revealing too much, when inherent risk and the chance of unexpected reward were an assumed and accepted aspect of moviegoing.

Before I bury myself in that lamentation, I will say that someone, somewhere in the halls of power did have the temerity to back a non-franchise, science-fiction adventure about the ancient past. Whether that person still has a job remains to be seen.

Mills (Adam Driver) takes a work assignment that will keep him away from home for two years. The job, piloting an exploratory spacecraft filled with people in cryosleep, promises to pay enough to afford treatment for his chronically ill daughter Nevine (Chloe Coleman). Even for ancient alien races, things rarely go to plan.

Written and directed by Scott Beck and Bryan Woods (writers of the A Quiet Place series) is humble enough in its ambitions that, tragically, it seems unlikely to succeed. Cleverly conceived, well-crafted and anchored by a customarily substantive performance from Driver with co-star Ariana Greenblatt, 65 is a movie out of its time, a work of popular entertainment that deserves a chance to be evaluated on its own merits, but may well (hopefully not) be lost among the avalanche of franchise commodities surrounding it. Dolbeer's Donkey Engine

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

Wonder machine or nemesis? One of Dolbeer's original single-cylinder, single-drum 1880s steam donkeys, now sitting next to Cookhouse Road in Samoa. Photo by Barry Evans

"... improvement is the order of the day, and there is no reason why the ox team should not make way for the steam engine as the stage coach has the [railroad] engine."
— Humboldt Times, July 31, 1881

Depending on your point of view, the Dolbeer Steam Donkey was the greatest labor saver in the logging industry's history or the nemesis of redwoods, being the machine that hastened the reduction of the once mighty groves to just 5 percent of what they'd been before the coming of Europeans. The engine revolutionized the lumber business, replacing teams of oxen — sometimes 20 and more — for several decades before its own replacement by the internal combustion engine.

Introduced by John Dolbeer in 1881 and patented the following year, the steam donkey's advantages were immediately obvious. Unlike oxen, it performed flawlessly in hot and cold weather and wasn't bothered by muddy, slippery conditions. By the turn of the century, 35 were in use in Humboldt and Mendocino counties, with nearly 400 working down the entire West Coast.

Dolbeer's original steam donkey, inspired by similar engines on ships, consisted of a wood-burning boiler and a "simplex" (single acting cylinder), connected to a horizontal "gypsy" winch drum (see illustration). The whole contraption was mounted on wooden skids, so the donkey could haul itself to a convenient location near the trees being felled. Later models were larger and more complicated, with duplex (compound) engines and multiple drums. (Why "donkey?" The usual story is that, when steam-powered winches were first to load ships, seamen considered them half as powerful as horses.)

Although later adapted for many tasks in the timber harvesting business, steam donkeys were originally used to haul newly felled redwoods (branches pruned) from where they lay to a skid road, en route to the company sawmill. A thick hemp rope, later a steel cable, was attached to the downed log by the "choker setter," who visually signaled the "whistle punk" — usually a kid — who in turn let the "donkey-man" know to start dragging the log in by opening the regulator which activated the winch. The fourth member of the team, the "spool tender," guided the line over the drum with a stick. Once the log had been yarded, or hauled in, a "line horse" pulled the line back out for the next log. By one estimate, a good crew could haul 5,000 tons of logs in a single day.

John Dolbeer (1827-1902) headed west from New England, hoping to join the Gold Rush. Instead, in 1853, he purchased a mill in Eureka before joining forces with lumber baron (and, later, mansion builder) William Carson, forming the Dolbeer and Carson Lumber Co. in 1863. Their huge mill operated on the waterfront, on the present site of Halverson Park, until the 1970s.

Dolbeer's life story is not a happy one. After recovering financially from several lumber mill fires, he married late in life, only to have his wife take her own life following a long illness, and his young son die in an accident. His bad luck reached beyond the grave: His daughter also committed suicide two years after his own death. He is memorialized today in the name of the Eureka street that runs south from St. Joe's Hospital to Hemlock Street.

Barry Evans (he/him, barryevans9@yahoo.com) wonders why it took so long to develop the donkey engine after James Watt's 1776 steam engine was shown to be viable.

It's coming.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF MICHAEL S. RYAN, a/k/a MICHAEL STEPHEN RYAN CASE NO. PR2300047

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of MICHAEL S. RYAN, a/k/a MICHAEL STEPHEN RYAN

A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner HEATHER L. MAY In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt.

The petition for probate requests that HEATHER L. MAY be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court.

THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on March 30, 2023 at 1:31 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 3

You have been served with a Notice of Petition to Administer Estate pursuant to which a court hearing has been scheduled. Due to the COVID-19 pandemic, if you wish to appear at the court hearing, you must do so remotely. Instructions to appear remotely are set forth on the Court's website: www.humboldt.courts.ca.gov.

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF PHYLLIS JORDAN aka PHYLLIS ANN JORDAN CASE NO. PR2300051

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of PHYLLIS JORDAN aka PHYLLIS ANN JORDAN

A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner LYNN MARIE JAMISON

In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt.

The petition for probate requests that LYNN MARIE JAMISON be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court.

THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on March 30, 2023 at 1:31 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 3, Room: 3

For information on how to appear remotely for your hearing, please visit https://www.humboldt.courts.ca.gov/

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

Free Will Astrology

Week of March 16, 2023

By Rob Brezsny
freewillastrology@freewillastrology.com

ARIES (March 21-April 19): I highly recommend the following experiences: 1. ruminating about what you learned in a relationship that ended—and how those lessons might be useful now. 2. ruminating about a beloved place you once regarded as home—and how the lessons you learned while there might be inspiring now. 3. ruminating about a riddle that has long mystified you—and how clarifying insights you receive in the coming weeks could help you finally understand it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): For "those who escape hell," wrote Charles Bukowksi, "nothing much bothers them after that." Believe it or not, Taurus, I think that in the coming weeks, you can permanently escape your own personal version of hell—and never, ever have to return. I offer you my congratulations in advance. One strategy that will be useful in your escape is this idea from Bukowski: "Stop insisting on clearing your head—clear your f*cking heart instead."

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Gemini paleontologist Louis Agassiz (1807–1883) was a foundational contributor to the scientific tradition. Among his specialties was his hands-on research into the mysteries of fossilized fish. Though he was meticulously logical, he once called on his nightly dreams to solve a problem he faced. Here's the story: A potentially crucial specimen was largely concealed inside a stone. He wanted to chisel away the stone to get at the fossil, but was hesitant to proceed for fear of damaging the treasure inside. On three successive nights, his dreams revealed to him how he should approach the work. This information proved perfectly useful. Agassiz hammered away at the slab exactly as his dreams suggested and freed the fossilized fish. I bring this marvel to your attention, Gemini, because I suspect that you, too, need to carve or cut away an obstruction that is hiding something valuable. Can you get help from your dreams? Yes, or else in deep reverie or meditation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Will you flicker and sputter in the coming weeks, Cancerian? Or will you spout and surge? That is, will you be enfeebled by barren doubts, or will you embolden yourself with hearty oaths? Will you take nervous sips or audacious guzzles? Will you hide and equivocate, or else reveal and pounce? Dabble gingerly or pursue the joy of mastery? I'm here to tell you that which fork you take will depend on your intention and your willpower, not on the caprices of fate. So which will it be: Will you mope and fritter or untangle and illuminate?

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): I applaud psychologists who tell us how important it is to feel safe. One of the most crucial human rights is the confidence that we won't be physically or emotionally abused. But there's another meaning of safety that applies to those of us who yearn to express ourselves creatively. Singer-songwriter David Bowie articulated the truth: "If you feel safe in the area you're working in, you're not working in the right area. Always go a little further into the water than you feel you're capable of being in. Go a bit out of your depth, and when you don't feel that your feet are quite touching the bottom, you're in the right place to do something exciting." I think this is a wise strategy for most of us, even those who don't identify as artists. Almost everyone benefits from being imaginative and inventive and even a bit daring in their own particular sphere. And this will be especially applicable to you in the coming weeks, Leo.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You are in the sweet, deep phase of the Receiving Season. And so you have a right and a duty to show the world you are ready and available to be blessed with what you need and want. I urge you to do everything necessary to become a welcoming beacon that attracts a wealth of invigorating and healing influences. For inspiration, read this quote by author John Steinbeck: "It is so easy to give, so exquisitely rewarding. Receiving, on the other hand, if it be well done, requires a fine balance of self-knowledge and kindness. It requires humility and tact and great understanding of relationships . . . It requires a self-esteem to receive—a pleasant acquaintance and liking for oneself."

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Libran poet E. E. Cummings wrote that daffodils "know the goal of living is to grow." Is his sweet sentiment true? I would argue it's only partially accurate. I believe that if we want to shape our destinies with courage and creativity, we need to periodically go through phases of decay and decline. They make periods of growth possible. So I would say, "The goal of life is to grow and wither and grow and wither and grow." Is it more fun to grow than to wither? Maybe. But sometimes, withering is educational and necessary. Anyway, Libra, I suspect you are finishing a time of withering and will soon embark on a series of germinations and blossoms.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): All of us have elements of genius. Every person on the planet possesses at least one special talent or knack that is a gift to others. It could be subtle or unostentatious, like a skill for communicating with animals or for seeing what's best in people. Or maybe it's more spectacular, like composing beautiful music or raising children to be strong and compassionate. I mention this, Scorpio, because the coming weeks will be an excellent time to identify your unique genius in great detail—and then nurture it and celebrate it in every way you can imagine.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The emblem associated with Sagittarius is an archer holding a bow with the arrow pointed upwards. This figure represents your tribe's natural ambition to always aim higher. I bring this to your attention because your symbolic quiver is now full of arrows. But what about your bow? Is it in tip-top condition? I suggest you do some maintenance. Is the bow string in perfect shape? Are there any tiny frays? Has it been waxed recently? And what about the grip? Are there any small cracks or wobbles? Is it as steady and stable as it needs to be? I have one further suggestion as you prepare for the target-shooting season. Choose one or at most two targets to aim at rather than four or five.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): It's prime time to feel liberated from the urge to prove yourself to anyone. It's a phase when your self-approval should be the only kind of approval you need, a period when you have the right to remove yourself from any situation that is weighed down with gloomy confusion or apathetic passivity. This is exciting news! You have an unprecedented opportunity to recharge your psychic batteries and replenish your physical vitality.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): I suspect you can now accomplish healthy corrections without getting tangled up in messy karma. Here are my recommendations: 1. As you strive to improve situations that are awry or askew, act primarily out of love rather than guilt or pity. 2. Fight tenderly in behalf of beautiful justice, but don't fight harshly for ugly justice. 3. Ask yourself how you might serve as a kind of divine intervention in the lives of those you care about—and then carry out those divine interventions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): In describing her process, Piscean sculptor Anne Truitt wrote, "The most demanding part of living a lifetime as an artist is the strict discipline of forcing oneself to work steadfastly along the nerve of one's own most intimate sensitivity." I propose that many Pisceans, both artists and non-artists, can thrive from living like that. The coming weeks will be an excellent time to give yourself to such an approach with eagerness and devotion. I urge you to think hard and feel deeply as you ruminate on the question of how to work steadfastly along the nerve of your own most intimate sensitivity. ●

The following Contractors successfully prequalified through a public prequalification RFQ process released by the County of Humboldt in July of 2022: Arntz Builders, Inc., CA Lic. #856393; Broward Builders, Inc., CA Lic. #602146; Roebbelen Contracting, Inc., CA Lic. #734124; Sletten Construction Company, CA Lic. #446809; Stronghold Engineering, Inc., CA Lic. #787490; S+B James Construction Co., CA Lic. #521929. Bids for this work will only be accepted from the General Building Contractors listed above.

Each Bid must be contained in a sealed envelope addressed as set forth in said Bid Documents, and filed at the office of the Clerk of the Board of Supervisors of Humboldt County, 825 5th Street, Room 111, Eureka, California at or before 2:00 P.M., Pacific Daylight Time, on April 4, 2023. All Bids will be publicly opened and summary amounts read aloud. The officer whose duty it is to open the Bids will decide when the specified time for the opening of Bids has arrived.

Each bid must be in accordance with the bid documents, construction drawings and specifications on file at the Humboldt County Department of Public Works, 1106 Second Street, Eureka, CA 95501. These bid documents, construction drawings and specifications are available for viewing or downloading through the Humboldt County Department of Public Works website at humboldtgov.org/bids.aspx. Also through this website, a bidder may view and join a Document Holder's List for this work. Joining the Document Holder's List, and checking to see if there are addenda issued prior to bidding are the sole responsibility of the bidder. If any addendum is issued, the County will attempt to notify each document holder on the Document Holder's List using the email address entered onto the Document Holder's List. County shall not in any way be responsible or liable for failure of a document holder to receive notification. It is the bidder's responsibility, prior to submitting the bid, to check the website or otherwise inquire to determine whether the County has issued any Addenda.

Each Bid shall be submitted on the forms furnished by the County within the Bid Documents. All forms must be completed.

Each Bid shall be accompanied by one of the following forms of Bidder's Security to with a certified check or a cashier's check payable to the County, U.S. Government Bonds, or a Bid Bond executed by an admitted insurer authorized to issue surety bonds in the State of California (in the form set forth in said Contract Documents). The Bidder's security shall be in the amount equal to at least ten percent (10%) of the Bid.

The successful Bidder will be required to furnish and pay for a satisfactory faithful performance bond and a satisfactory payment bond in the forms set forth in said Bid Documents.

The County reserves the right to reject any or all Bids or to waive any informalities in any Bid. No Bid shall be withdrawn for a period of one-hundred (100) calendar days subsequent to the opening of Bids without the consent of the County.

All Bidders will be required to certify that they are eligible to submit a Bid on this project and that they are not listed either (1) on the Controller General's List of Ineligible Bidders/Contractors, or (2) on the debarred list of the Labor Commissioner of the State of California.

The successful Bidder shall possess a valid Contractor's license in good standing, with a classification of "B" (General Building Contractor) at the time the contract is awarded.

The successful Bidder will be required to comply with all equal employment opportunity laws and regulations both at the time of award and throughout the duration of the Project.

This project is subject to compliance monitoring and enforcement by the Department of Industrial Relations. Pursuant to Section 1771.1(a) of the California Labor Code, a contractor or subcontractor shall not be qualified to bid on, be listed in a bid proposal, subject to the requirements of Section 4104 of the Public Contract Code, or engage in the performance of any contract for public work, as defined in Sections 1770 et seq. of the Labor Code, unless currently registered and qualified to perform public work pursuant to Section 1725.5 of the Labor Code. It is not a violation of Section 1771.1(a) for an unregistered contractor to submit a bid that is authorized by Section 7029.1 of the Business and Professions Code or by Section 10164 or 20103.5 of the Public Contract Code, provided the contractor is registered to perform public work pursuant to Section 1725.5 at the time the contract is awarded.

The Contractor, and each subcontractor participating in the Project, shall be required to pay the prevailing wages as established by the Department of Industrial Relations, Division of Labor Statistics and Research, P.O. Box 420603, San Francisco, CA, Phone: (415) 703-4780.

The attention of Bidders is directed to the fact that the work proposed herein to be done will be financed in whole or in part with State and County funds, and therefore all of the applicable State and County statutes, rulings and regulations will apply to such work.

In the performance of this contract, the Contractor will not discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment in accordance with the provisions of the California Fair Employment and Housing Act. (Government Code section 12900et seq.)

In accordance with the provisions of Section 22300 of the Public contractors' code, the Contractor may elect to receive 100% of payments due under the contract from time to time, without retention of any portion of the payment, by entering into an Escrow Agreement for Security Deposits In Lieu of Retention.

"NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid on a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of the outstanding lien that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call 844-477-7869, or visit this internet Web site www.stoxposting.com, using the file number assigned to this case T.S.# 86125. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale." For sales conducted after January 1, 2021: NOTICE TO TENANT: You may have a right to purchase this property after the trustee auction pursuant to Section 2924m of the California Civil Code. If you are an "eligible tenant buyer," you can purchase the property if you match the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. If you are an "eligible bidder," you may be able to purchase the property if you exceed the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. There are three steps to exercising this right of purchase. First, 48 hours after the date of the trustee sale, you can call (844) 477-7869, or visit this internet website www.STOXPOSTING.com, using the file number assigned to this case 86125 to find the date on which the trustee's sale was held, the amount of the last and highest bid, and the address of the trustee. Second, you must send a written notice of intent to place a bid so that the trustee receives it no more than 15 days after the trustee's sale. Third, you must submit a bid; by remitting the funds and affidavit described in Section 2924m(c) of the Civil Code; so that the trustee receives it no more than 45 days after the trustee's sale. If you think you may qualify as an "eligible tenant buyer" or "eligible bidder," you should consider contacting an attorney or appropriate real estate professional immediately for advice regarding this potential right to purchase.
